The role of a breast care nurse specialist (CNS)

A breast CNS provides information, advice and support during mammograms and diagnosis and helps guide you through your surgery.

The role of the breast oncology nurse specialist (CNS)

Provides information, advice and support during your treatment and helps guide you through your chemotherapy, immunotherapy and radiotherapy.

The role of the breast nurse practitioner

A nurse practitioner deals with your recovery from surgery and radiotherapy. They provide advice and care on wound healing during and after your hospital stay.

Support and Information

At the time of diagnosis and afterwards, you may have lots of questions. It might help to talk them through with someone. The CNS is available to answer any questions you may have about your diagnosis and/or the proposed treatment plan.

They can also provide written information on relevant topics.

If you need help coping with your symptoms and/or side effects related to the treatment

At times, the disease or treatment may cause symptoms or side effects which can be difficult to cope with.

Part of the CNS role is to provide specialist nursing advice to help try and relieve any symptoms related to your illness, and/or troublesome side effects of treatment.

If you need a link between different people

Often patient care is shared between a specialist team of health professionals. We can provide you with information about different services and support organisations.

If your family needs support

We are available to speak to your partner and your family, who may need some support with their own feelings surrounding your illness, or information on how they can best support you. You might like to show them a copy of this leaflet.
